Notes on Interpreting the Data

- The Halton Youth Survey relies on self-reported behaviours from students. Caution should be exercised when interpreting the meaning of findings as they may not be representative of all students.
- These tables report percentages, so it is important to consider the number of students in each municipality (which is listed in Table 2b). For instance, if 12% of Grade 10 students in Halton Hills are at risk for depression, this is equivalent to 12% of 633, or about 76 Grade 10 students in Halton Hills.
- Use caution when interpreting a small increase or decrease in a few percentage points.
- There can be significant differences in outcome measures for males and females. Generally, females are more likely to have a higher number of Developmental Assets and less likely to engage in risky behaviours. Keep this in mind when interpreting the data.

Note:

The Halton Youth Survey questions used to measure Developmental Assets were not a scientific measurement of Developmental Assets in the students assessed.

The questions that form the basis for the Halton Youth Survey were adopted from the Ontario Student Drug Use Survey, the National Longitudinal Survey of Children and Youth, and The Health Behaviour in School-Aged Children (HBSC) Study. Each of these surveys has been conducted over a number of years and has demonstrated reliability and validity in similar populations.

Developmental Assets

The OKN has adopted the Developmental Assets framework as a way to collectively and uniformly understand, promote and measure positive child and youth development. The following tables provide data on all twenty of the Developmental Assets measured in the Halton Youth Survey. When comparing differences and analyzing the data, higher numbers and percentages are more favourable.
